CORA INDIAN FESTIVE MUSIC (1965)

In remote regions in the Sierra Madre Occidental Mountains of Western Mexico, there still remains pockets of Indians who have not adopted the predominant Mestizo culture of Mexico. By virtue of their remoteness, they have kept their own tribal identities, cultures, and languages. Such a tribe is the Cora, living in the mountains of the northwestern part of the state of Nayarit, Mexico. A relative to the ancient Aztec, the Cora belong to the Uto-Aztecan linguistic family. Their music is similar to other Indian tribes of northwest Mexico in both its emphasis on rhythm and its instruments. Cora music is largely rhythmic and much use is made of percussion instruments. Even the violin seems at times particularly rhythmically oriented so as to provide a beat for the dancing rather than as music in its own right. The first nine tracks were recorded in the Cora village of San Blasito on the San Pedro River, the final selection in the neighboring Mestizo mountain village of San Pedro de Honor. Included are a knife dance, violin improvisations with flute accompaniment, flute solos, music and revelry and a ceremonial dance at San Pedro de Honor. Descriptive notes enclosed. MODERN MAYAN

INDIAN MUSIC OF CHIAPAS, MEXICO

The music of the indigenous people of the southern Mexican state of Chiapas reflects many varied influences, past and present. They refer to their music as the "Real Song" and their language as the "Real Speech." The four languages spoken here are Tzotzil, Tzeltal, Chol and Tojolabal and all share their basic Mayan roots with both Aztec and Spanish borrowings. Music is always performed in the context of 'custumbre' or custom, never for its own sake.

Hispanic/ New Mexico

DARK AND LIGHT IN SPANISH NEW MEXICO

Alabados and bailes. Alabados The music of alabados (from albar, "to praise"), Spanish Catholic hymns of New Mexico preserved by the Penitente Brothers, members of a lay religious society of the Roman Catholic Church. Los Hermanos Penitente, formerly found in most Hispanic villages in New Mexico and Colorado, the Brotherhood is strongest now in rural north central New Mexico and the San Luis Valley of southern Colorado. They serve as a welfare agency committed to mutual aid and charitable activities. The Brothers' pious observances are centered around the Passion of Jesus and the spirit of penance. Many of their traditions are long standing and deeply rooted in old European and especially Iberian forms of Catholicism. Most rites, hymns, prayers and sacred artifacts are strongly influenced by the Franciscans who were the first and for over a century the only clergy in New Mexico. The profound feeling of sadness and loneliness of the alabados seems to be intimately related to the land of northern New Mexico and to the history and lineage of the people who live there.

The music of the Bailes, social dances, is as different from the alabados as light is from dark. It is like two sides of a people's character, one side obsessed with suffering and death, the other delighting in the dance. Dancing is a pastime and has been an integral part of the Spanish people of New Mexico since earliest times. The music truly reflects the cultures and traditions of a vibrant village life.

Seven Alabados and thirteen Bailes. Extensive liner notes with historical background information on the songs, musicians and music sources.

Central & South America

ANTHOLOGY OF CENTRAL & SOUTH AMERICAN INDIAN MUSIC

Compiled by Alan Lazar. This collection is part of the classic Folkways Collection that has been preserved for future generations by the Smithsonian Institution. Alan Lazar tell us that at one time the area of Central and South America was the home of diverse Indian cultures and civilizations ranging from the nomadic hunters of the Tierra del Fuego and Patagonia; to the river and forest peoples of the Amazon; to the military empires of the Andes and Central Mexico; to the theocratic states of southern Mexico and Guatemala. Many of the peoples that once inhabited these lands are extinct or are almost extinct. Others have been assimilated into the dominant European cultures, but most, though conquered, passively yet stubbornly maintain their older way of life despite submission to the conqueror. Excellent, extensive, liner notes detail differences between North American and Central and South American Indian music styles as well as detail information and explanations on all of the songs. An invaluable addition to your musical collection. Ideal for the ethnomusicologist and music historian.

MUSIC OF THE MAYA-QUICHES OF

GUATEMALA

- THE RABINAL ACHI AND BAILE DE LAS CANASTAS (1978)

This music was recorded over a two month period in the areas of Rabinal in the Eastern section and Chajul in the Western highlands of Guatemala. In both locals first recordings were made of dance-dramas of the pre-columbian period. Recordings were also made in the districts of Solola, (the Lake Area), Totonicapan and Quetzaltenango among the Kekchi, Kakchiquel and Zutujil speaking Indians, and also the Ixils of Nebaj, Cotzal and Chajul. Most of the music is instrumental; the few songs in the collection are from Chajul. The first track is two musical fragments of the Rabinal Achi recorded in Rabinal, Baja Verapaz. Also included are the Baile de las Canastas (Dance of the Baskets) recorded in Chajul, Quiche and the Finale del Baile de las Canastas or Final Scene; two flute solos recorded in Rabinal, Baja Verapaz and three flute solos recorded in San Juan, Chamelco. The Baile del Venado (Deer Dance) was recorded in Rabinal, Quiche. Son de Cuaresma (Music for Lent) was recorded in Chajul, Quiche. Side two contains the Baile de la Conquista (Dance of the Conquest) recorded in Momostenago, Totonicapan. The Baile de Ajitz recorded in Rabinal, Baja Verapaz and another Baile de la Conquista with the Son de Pedro Cartocarrero recorded in Chichicastenago, Quiche and the Son de Santa Maria recorded in Nabaj, Quiche. There are three songs for the Indian Marimba (the Baile de San Miguel, Dance for Saint Michael) recorded in Chichicasten, Quiche and three Ladino Marimba Music recorded in Nabal, Quiche. The final selection is the Son de San Gaspar (Music for Saint Gaspar) from Chajul played for dancing during the Christmas season. Descriptive notes enclosed.

RITUAL MUSIC OF THE KIYAPÓ-

XIKRIN OF BRAZIL (Brazilian Amazon)

The Xikrin villages of the Kayapó, located in the Brazilian Amazon, perform long and elaborate ceremonies to initiate their youth and to renew their relationships with the natural world, with one another, and with the spirits. Powerful choral music, performed by groups of men and women, characterizes the music of these communities. Xikrin music provides a strong system of community support for their continuing resistance to invasions and abuse of their traditional lands. These 1988 digital recordings include selections from several Xikrin ceremonies with explanations in the accompanying booklet. An excellent introduction to Xikrin culture and mythology is presented by Brazilian specialists in a 76 page booklet, included. Royalties from this recording are directed to the Xikrin community Catate. This edition of Traditional Music Of The World 7 is edited by the International Institute for Traditional Music in cooperation with the International Council for Traditional Music.

Aztec / Mayan

SACRED GUITAR AND VIOLIN MUSIC OF THE MODERN AZTECS (1977)

The Aztecs are one of Mexico's largest Indian groups, numbering over 1,000,000 and they are spread over many parts of contemporary Mexico. One area they inhabited was the southern and southwestern fringe of the Huasteca - an ancient and independent kingdom in eastern Mexico located along the Gulf of Mexico near the mouth of the Panuce River. The region is also inhabited by the Huastecs, the Otomi and the Tepehua Indians. This recording was made during 1972 and 1973 in the Village of Puyecaco, Municipio of Ixhuatlan de Madero, Veracruz. The songs recorded include Xochipitsauak, perhaps the most widely known piece of sacred music in the entire Huasteca; a series of sacred music that accompanies the short ritual carried out at each house during the winter solstice fertility ceremony and the Dance of the Tlamatikel where the height of the winter solstice fertility ritual has been reached. Also three Ayakachmitotia' rattle dances (Nopalli', Koatl and Ehtokani') that are the typical musical background for the ritual dancing performed for their fertility diety Tonantsi' during the winter solstice ceremony called Tlaketililis. XAVIER QUIJAS YXAYOTL

- AMERICA INDIGENA - MUSIC OF ANCIENT MEXICO

This precolumbian music was prohibited for 300 years due to the intensity and deep spiritual impact it had on the people of that time. All the musical sounds are the natural sounds of handmade instruments from ancient Mexico including: Mayan & Aztec drums & clay flutes, Tarahumara drums, turtle shells and Mayan ocean drum. Xavier is a descendant of the Huichol Indians of Mexico. He has dedicated his life to the music, art & spiritual beliefs of ancient Mexico, investigating the music of the many different tribes. This is an ancient music for a new generation. We look forward to his second release now in production.

WACHAN BAJIYOPERAK

- INKA SUNRISE

Wachan Bajiyooperak was born in Ciromayo Cusco Peru in 1962. His father was a HAMPIG medicine man. Since his early childhood Wachan showed a deep connection with the temples and the old ways of his ancestors. He was trained by his father in Natural Medicine, and by his mother in traditional Inka music and mythology. Wachan is working to restore and preserve the medicine, music, language, and religion of his culture. This music is for healing. The songs express the rhythms of life, like the wind that sings in the trees with the birds and the rivers and oceans that dance with the roar of thunder. Ten songs including traditional melodies and new songs composed by Wachan himself. Songs include Pachamama (Mother Earth), Mosoq' Illariy (Song of Hope), Elme (Love Song), and Hampiq' Taki (Healing Song).

INKUYO - MUSIC OF THE ANDES

The Incas used music as a medium to transmit their history. As they had no written language, they recounted events and stories through their music. Owing to this tradition, the Incas not only were able to preserve their history, but also the music and instruments that were played in their festivals. To this day daily chores and significant events are played out in music - musical rhythms born from numerous cultural mixes and influences. INKUYO offers listeners a variety of Andean-born rhythms while emulating the sounds of ancient songs, dances and festivals which remain popular and celebrated today. Listeners are joyfully carried back to the earliest Incan civilizations through a combination of modern compositions and traditional pieces inspired by the land and its people. It is works such as this that are not only beautiful but preserve and perpetuate culture and history while informing and cultivating a broad and appreciative audience. INKUYO: Pamela Darlington, guitar, sikus, charango, pututu, drums, vocals and the founding member of INKUYO; Gonzalo Varga, quena, violin, sikus, antara, drums, vocals; Daniel Zamallo, guitar, violin, mandolin, bandurria, bass guitar, vocals.

- LAND OF THE INCAS

This album is a mix of contemporary and traditional pieces. Songs include: Camino A Inkuyo - inspired by a trip to Inkuyo, a remote mountain village high in the heart of the Andes where people still live as their ancestors have for centuries; Uña, a contemporary piece in the traditional Huayno rhythm, one of the oldest and still most popular rhythms in Peru, Bolivia and northern parts of Argentina and Chile. Plus, seventeen other pieces telling the story of a people with a rich and deep cultural heritage. Liner notes on all the songs.

- TEMPLE OF THE SUN

One of the most important aspects of the Inca culture was its religion. The Incas linked much of their daily life and worship with their religious beliefs, natural the elements, such as the sun, moon, thunder, pachamama (mother earth) and many other marvels of nature. Songs include: T'iskuy Vicuna by Fredy Vargas, a modern composition inspired by the gracefulness and agility of the vicuna, the smallest and most beautiful cousin of the llama; Estampa Tapacarimanta, a traditional festive song selection from festival days; and eleven other songs and dances inspired by locations, honoring events and cultural practices and traditions of the Incan people. Liner notes tell the stories of the songs.

- DOUBLE-HEADED SERPENT

The serpent is a recurrent figure in religious beliefs, ceremonies, activities and legends. Folktales and legends surrounding it in practically every culture have combined to produce religious overtones in many different parts of the world. While in many religions the snake is primarily a symbol, direct worship of the snake as a god-like creature (rather than as an indirect representation) is not uncommon. Python worshippers are found in Africa, and the cobra cults of India are well known. Quetzalcoatl was the feathered serpent of the Aztecs. In the U.S. the serpent is also an active symbol for certain Protestant sects and Hopi Indians, and Burmese snake charmers, who end their ceremonies with a kiss on the top of the cobra's head. Handling of snakes is done both as a gesture of belief and faith in the power of the gods and as an act of defiance of the same power. These songs celebrate the double headed serpent.

With guest artist Jose Luis Reynolds on charango, bandurria, guitar and vocals. With the style characteristic of INKUYO come songs of heritage and place; Kantu, a traditional piece - the kantu rhythm is characteristic of the Callawayas of Charasani, Bolivia. It is believed that the majestic kantu rhythm was the official music of the Inca guards which they played to accompany religious processions and parades. Kalasaya, is about the walled compound know as the Kalasaya which was the main ceremonial center for seasonal festivals. 13 more songs with deep and meaningful relationships to the land, the people and their history.

LOS INCAS is comprised of Yovani (Quechua), Juan (Diaguaita/Mapuche), Raul Chachapoyas (Qheshwa), and Pedro Diaz (Qheshwa). LOS INCAS is not just a musical group but an expression of those who understand the message of La Raza. Their music is not a cry of a broken spirit, but an affirmation of human survival. They have created a mystical and sweeping sound that evolved from blending a variety of tra-ditional and contemporary indigenous music of the Americas. LOS INCAS made their television debut with Carole King on Entertainment Tonight, followed by guest appearances for international television and two feature films. In 1992 LOS INCAS was honored to represent The Year of Indigenous People at the United Nations. LOS INCAS performed across three continents with Paul Simon on his 1993-94 tour. During 1996-97, Yovani collaborated in the appearance and performance of the musical score in Tim Allen's Walt Disney film Jungle to Jungle.

- DEDICATED TO TUPAC AMARU

Jose Gabriel Condorcanqui Noguera Thupa Amaru II, known as Tupac Amaru. An Incan, El Tupac's most notable and noble contribution to the South American Indigenous Movement was his formation of a self-governing nation. He was interested in unifying all ethnicities and sectors of South America. His witnessing of the abuses committed by the Spanish invaders against his nation inspired a massive Indian revolt that shook the dominance of the Spanish Americas. Tupac Amaru paid with his life and the lives of his wife and three children. Out of this injustice a seed of self-determination and desire for independence was planted and has grown into what is now Central and South America.

- FROM THE OTHER SIDE OF THE VOLCANO

LOS INCAS tells us, "In 1992 we were commemorating 500 years of holding on to our way of life for our 7th generation ...through our music we make an urgent call for all people to come together to help mend the sacred hoop...on the morning of Monday, June 22, 1992, while this album was being created, a massive violation of human rights was taking place: 900 innocent men, women and children joined in passive resistance to protect and preserve their human rights and their land, were camped out in the Plaza Mayor in front of the Government Building in Guatemala City. Without warning, they were awakened with violence by police and security forces - tents were slashed and their money and personal belongings were stolen. They were then divided into union workers and farmers, and kidnapped. This was all administered by the Minister of Government". LOS INCAS dedicates this album to the Maya Quiche Nation and its descendants, whom they feel have been able to maintain a profoundly civilized and humble human existence despite persistent violations.

MYSTIC WARRIORS

A group of 5 young musicians with various backgrounds and nationalities, MYSTIC WARRIORS has been performing in the Washington DC area since 1982 exposing the essence of Andean music in a modern & unique way. The music played is a feast of Indian flutes, pan pipes of different sizes and Indian drums that go back to the times before Columbus. The music is characteristic of the Andean mountain range which sits in what today are the countries of Bolivia, Ecuador, the northern parts of Argentina and Chile and the southern parts of Columbia and Venezuela. Wind instruments used in their recordings are characteristic of the Aymara culture which was located in the alti-plano (high planes) region, a part of the Inca empire, and blend in complete harmony with their string instruments, Indian imitations of the guitar brought by the Spanish. MYSTIC WARRIORS has earned a well-deserved reputation for their originality, professionalism and musical integrity. Their haunting melodies reflect the powers of nature transcending time and space, exposing the social, political and cultural feelings of the common people of Latin America with high energy tunes.

- MYSTIC WARRIORS

- THE SHADOW OF THE SUN

While the music of MYSTIC WARRIORS might appear to fit into the "New Age" classification, it often sounds like contemporary jazz, alternative rock or mainstream popular. The group believes that their style crosses all these without leaving the boundaries of Andean music. MYSTIC WARRIORS will transport you to a time long forgotten but yet to come. Liner notes explain the musical instruments.

- BEYOND REALITY

MYSTIC WARRIORS have created a sound uniquely their own. It is fresh, fun, and filled with the passion of The Andes. The pan pipes and other wind instruments are quite exotic, with the largest bass notes resonating powerfully. Each of the ten tracks is a jewel. The wind instruments and some string instruments used in this recording are characteristic of the Aymara Culture which was located in the high plains region of Bolivia, South America and was part of the Incan Empire.

- ANTHOLOGY OF THE ANDES

The people of the Andes have lived in the highlands of South America since approximately 1400 B.C. They have passed on their culture, traditions, art and music from one generation to another. The last pure generation of these highland people were the Incas. The traditional music which lives in the mountains and valleys of the Andes, to this day remains a central part of the societies living in this region. Thanks to the musicians who continue to use the same instruments as their ancestors before them, that music lives. This is the first anthology of modern Andean music with musical instruments that have been played for generations and melodies modernised by the incorporation of the classical guitar and Charango. The wind instruments and some string instruments used in the recording are characteristic of the Aymara culture which was located in the high plains region of Bolivia, South America and was part of the Incan Empire. Ten songs including El Condor Pasa, Llamar and Ojos Azules.

ÑANDA MAÑACHI

- ANDEAN MUSIC

"Ñanda Mañachi" means "Please let me use your path in order to cross". This saying originated during the annual Sun Festival or Inti Raimi. Much like the Feast Days on any Pueblo, the Inti Raimi festivities encourages every house to be laden with food and drink. Musicians and dancers go house to house and in order to go to a different house they must travel along the previous one's path, so in order to cross they ask "Ñanda Mañachi". Six of the 20 Ñanda Mañachi musicians are represented in this album playing traditional music, from Ecuador, Bolivia, Columbia and Peru. They incorporate flutes, (kenas, rodador, sampoña/ pan pipes), strings (charango, guitar), percussion (sheep hoof maracas, scraper, claves) and the big Tumba or drum that beats out the heartbeat.
